That scenario's incompatibility with empirical reality is obvious, as the anthropogenic world introduced by increasing greenhouse gas concentrations is predicted to affect weather, bring environmental changes, impact sea level rise, and threaten food and water security. However, the idea that anthropogenic weather will also increase other environmental stresses to the oceans is not. It may, in fact, appear to be a very reasonable idea. I therefore, cannot appreciate the lack of attention to the potential of human-induced environmental changes to the oceans, and the need to consider the ways that climate can
