

FOOD PRESERVATIVE

Introduction

To understand preservatives, one should first know about food additives as preservatives are a type of food additive. Food additives are substances added to food to maintain or improve its safety, freshness, taste, texture, or appearance. The Joint FAO/WHO Expert Committee on Food Additives (JECFA) is the international body responsible for evaluating the safety of food additives. Only food additives that have been evaluated and deemed safe by JECFA, based on which the Codex Alimentarius Commission has established maximum use levels, can be used in foods that are traded internationally.

What FAO and Codex say about Food Additives

Food additive is any substance not normally consumed as a food by itself and not normally used as a typical ingredient of the food, whether or not it has nutritive value. The intentional addition of which to food for a technological (including organoleptic) purpose in the manufacture, processing, preparation, treatment, packing, packaging, transport or holding of such food results, or may be reasonably expected to result directly or indirectly, in it or its byproducts becoming a component of or otherwise affecting the characteristics of such foods. The term does not include contaminants or substances added to food for maintaining or improving nutritional qualities.

Food preservation is one of the methods to protect food from unwanted microbial growth. After the food is produced, product is store and protect by covering the rice and curry with lids to keep away flies and other insects. By this, we are protecting it from any infection caused by them. This is a short-term condition. Chemical food preservatives, on the other hand, is done to preserve food for a longer time.

According to FAO: "Preservation" means a substance which when added to food, is capable of inhibiting, retarding, or arresting the process of fermentation, acidification, or other decomposition of food.

Food Additives vs Food Preservatives

Food Additives: Food additives are a wide range of chemical compounds used for different purposes of food processing and storage.

Food Preservatives: Preservatives are a type of food additive that inhibit the growth of bacteria, yeasts, and molds in foods, and prevent some undesirable chemical reactions such as lipid oxidation.

Objective

- 1.Prevention of food by damaging agents like microbes, insect etc.
- 2.Delay of significant spoilage.
- 3.Inhibit or prevention of the growth of microorganisms.
