

Application Overview Wellhead Control Panel

Key Objectives

- Critical control of safety valves
- Remotely control and monitor multiple wells from a single point
- Control production rates to optimize well profitability and yield

Wellhead Control Panel (WHCP)

The wellhead control panel (WHCP) is a hydraulic system that utilizes a hydraulic power pack (pump and accumulators) and a wellhead control module to perform its task. The output of WHCP is high pressure hydraulic supply and medium hydraulic supply to operate choke and safety valves. The wellhead control panel is also the interface between the plant control and the well safety system.

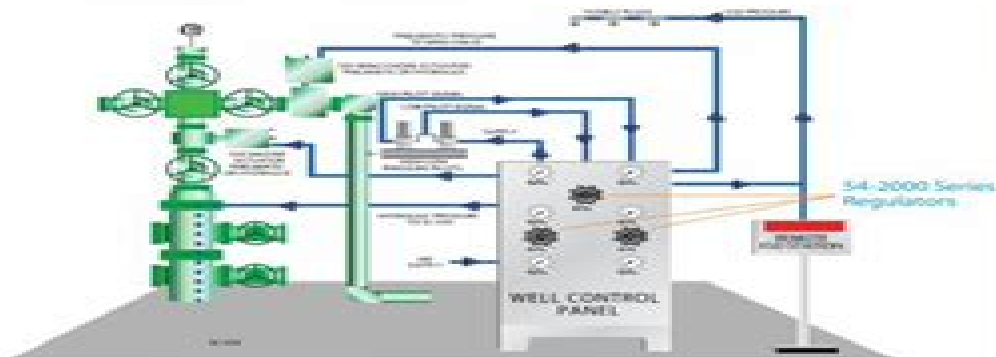

A typical wellhead control panel contains a system of valves and regulators, situated topside at the power source, which may be operated manually or by remote control to direct pressurized mineral oil or water-glycol to final control elements at the wellhead/Christmas tree.

A typical arrangement includes - reservoir, pumps, accumulators, solenoids, valves, pressure regulators, switches, motor control, transmitters and junction boxes. Each well is typically equipped with:

- Surface Controlled Subsurface Safety Valves (SCSSV) or Down Hole Valves (DHSV)
(In most applications, SCSSV is an on-off valve with hydraulic actuators)
- Surface Safety Valves (SSV)
  - Master Valves (MV)
  - Wing Valves (WV)
(controls production rate)

Customer Pain

In some instances environmental concerns have led to increased use of water based fluids such as water-glycol. However, water based media may cause damage to sliding surfaces due to the lack of lubrication. Furthermore, deeper wells lead to higher pressure requirements such as 1380 bar/20,000 psig. As pressure increases, the potential sealing and control problems likewise increase.
