

Intake Structure

- The basic function of intake structure is to help in safely withdrawing water from the source and then to discharge this water in to the withdrawal conduit, through which it reaches the water treatment plant.
- It is constructed at the entrance of the withdrawal conduit and thereby protecting it from being damaged/clogged by ice, debris.
- Sometimes from reservoirs where gravity flow is possible, water is directly transmitted to the treatment through intake structure.
- If gravity flow is not possible, water entering intake structure is lifted by pumps and taken to the treatment plant.

Selecting Location of Intake Structure

- Site should be near the treatment plant to reduce conveyance cost.
- Intake must be located in the purer zone of the source so that best quality water is withdrawn from source to reduce the load on the treatment plant.
- Intake must never be located in the vicinity of waste water disposal point.
- Intake must never be located near the navigation channels so as to reduce chances of pollution due to waste discharge from ships.
- The site should be such as to permit greater withdrawal of water, if required in future.
- Intake must be located at a place from where it can draw water even during the driest period of the year.
- The intake site should remain easily accessible during floods and should not get flooded.
- In meandering rivers, the intakes should not be located on curves.

Types of Intakes
