manuscript was perhaps unrecognized until the appearance in 1904 of Dr Williamson's History of Portrait Miniatures. While making some researches for Dr Williamson the present writer found that several manuscript treatises preserved at the British Museum and elsewhere had a close relationship with Norgate's Miniatūra and that the Bodleian manuscript to be called hereafter Tann 326 for convenience of reference was apparently the earliest and most important version of the treatise in its final form as written by Norgate within the last two years of his life. A few extracts from Tann 326 were made somewhat hurriedly for Dr Williamson while his book was in the press and I am glad of the opportunity now given by the Oxford University Press of publishing for the first time a complete transcript of this valuable work and of throwing some fresh light on its close kinship with the other manuscripts in question.
