Paper 7096/01

Paper 1

www.PapaCambridge.com

General comments

This session saw a significant increase in the number of candidates entered for this paper. It was pleasing to see that the vast majority of candidates were able to attempt all four questions within the time available and that most scripts contained four balanced answers. The better scripts usually contained frequent reference to appropriate industry examples. However, many candidates did not appreciate the wording of particular question sub-sections and, thus, did not fully address the issue that was being asked. On the whole, the stimulus material supplied with each of the four questions was well interpreted and many candidates were able to write with a degree of authority. However, far too many individuals resorted to copying sections of supplied text without any proper reference to the wording of the particular question they were attempting.

There were some significant variations both between and within Centres. Centres are strongly advised to give emphasis to the following as part of their examination preparations. The examination, as in all previous years, will involve candidates answering four structured questions in two hours. Each question will be based around at least one piece of original vocationally relevant stimulus material, specifically selected to reflect key aspects of the Syllabus content. Centres should make every effort to ensure that their candidates are familiar with past papers as part of their examination preparation. Furthermore, the structured questions based on each of the four pieces of stimulus material will show an increase in degree of difficulty and the following command verb hierarchy will be customarily used:

- Identify/Name/State
- Describe
- Explain
- Compare
- Discuss
- Evaluate.

The last part of each of the four questions will be more open-ended, inviting candidates to respond to a problem or issue. These parts of the questions will be assessed by the use of level of response criteria. These questions are often designed to examine several assessment objectives and provide candidates with the opportunity to write about actual examples or case studies with which they are familiar. Far too many individuals are unable to quote precise details therefore denying themselves access to higher marks.

Comments on specific questions

Question 1

This was set in the context of international airline operations. The stimulus material used for this question merely helped set the scene; it was surprising to see some candidates simply copying out text without any particular regard for the precise wording of the individual sub-questions.

- (a) Many candidates were unclear as to the meaning of the word 'carriers' and there was much guesswork here. Some achieved three valid examples, most commonly British Airways and Emirates, but others simply guessed at references from the article like 'Sky Nannys', 'Heathrow' and 'Norland College'.
- (b) This was well answered generally; most candidates were able to score at least two marks for simple ideas and some developed them well.
