

The background of the cover is a dark, textured collage. It features several human limbs, including arms and hands, some of which are pale and appear to be floating or reaching out. There are also faces, some of which are partially obscured or integrated into the overall composition. The scene is set in a dark, watery environment, with numerous small, bright orange petals or leaves floating around. A prominent green ribbon or string is draped across the upper right portion of the image. The overall effect is surreal and evocative, suggesting themes of social interaction, identity, and the human condition.

Bowman,2025 The second edition of the Oxford Handbook of Media Psychology explores facets of human behavior thoughts and feelings experienced in the context of media use and creation The volume spans foundational theories and methodological approaches presenting cutting edge research and offering an exploration of how technology impinges upon human psychology Key ideas include social media identity and self concept parasocial relationships fandom gaming and interactive media social representation mental health and media and AI The authors are widely regarded as top experts in the field     Socializing States Ryan Goodman,Derek Jinks,2013-09-11 The role of international law in global politics is as poorly understood as it is important But how can the international legal regime encourage states to respect human rights Given that international law lacks a centralized enforcement mechanism it is not obvious how this law matters at all and how it might change the behavior or preferences of state actors In Socializing States Ryan Goodman and Derek Jinks contend that what is needed is a greater emphasis on the mechanisms of law s social influence and the micro processes that drive each mechanism Such an emphasis would make clearer the micro foundations of international law This book argues for a greater specification and a more comprehensive inventory of how international law influences relevant actors to improve human rights conditions Substantial empirical evidence suggests three conceptually distinct mechanisms whereby states and institutions might influence the behavior of other states material inducement persuasion and what Goodman and Jinks call acculturation The latter includes social and cognitive forces such as mimicry status maximization prestige and identification The book argues that 1 acculturation is a conceptually distinct empirically documented social process through which state behavior is influenced and 2 acculturation based approaches might occasion a rethinking of fundamental regime design problems in human rights law This exercise not only allows for reexamination of policy debates in human rights law it also provides a conceptual framework for assessing the costs and benefits of various design principles While acculturation is not necessarily the most important or most desirable approach to promoting human rights a better understanding of all three mechanisms is a necessary first step in the development of an integrated theory of international law s influence Socializing States provides the critical framework to improve our understanding of how norms operate in international society and thereby improve the capacity of global and domestic institutions to build cultures of human rights     Avoiders Michael A.

The Art of Status Jelena Subotic, Professor of Political Science Jelena Subotic, 2025-10-09 An illuminating exploration of the relationship between the restitution of looted art global status and the international construction of national cultural heritage Why is art restitution a matter of politics How does the artwork displayed in national museums reflect the international status of the state that owns it Why do some states agree to return looted art and others resist

National art collections have long been a way for states to compete with each other for status prestige and cultural worth in international society. In many former imperial nations however these collections include art looted during imperial expansions and colonial occupations. While this was once a sign of high international standing the markers of such status particularly in the context of art have since significantly changed. A new international legal and normative architecture governing art provenance developed after World War II and became institutionalized in the 1990s and 2000s. Since then there have been national and global social movements demanding the return of looted art. This shift has established not only that looting is wrong but more importantly that restitution is morally right. As a result of this reframing of what it means to own art an artifact's historical provenance has become a core element of its value and the search for provenance and demands for restitution a direct threat to state status. The same objects that granted states high international status now threaten to provoke status decline. In The Art of Status Jelena Subotic examines this relationship between the restitution of looted art and international status with a focus on the Parthenon Elgin Marbles the Benin Bronzes and a collection of paintings looted during the Holocaust that are now housed at the Serbian National Museum. Subotic tells the story of these artworks how they were looted how they ended up on display in national museums and how the art restitution disputes have unfolded. While these cases are different in terms of their historical context of looting and ownership claims the movements for their restitution and resistance to it illustrate the larger questions of how national cultural heritage is internationally constructed and how it serves states desire for international status and prestige. An in depth and nuanced account of art restitution disputes. The Art of Status illuminates the shifting political significance of art on the international stage from ownership to restitution.

Between these extremes, the contributors, all internationally recognized in their field, offer their perspectives on developmental processes.

that may predispose individuals to empathize with and respond to the needs of others individual differences that seem to interact with situational demands to promote helping and the underlying motivations of those helping others They explain volunteerism intragroup cooperation and intergroup cooperation to move the analysis from the individual to group level phenomena They extend the consideration of this topic to include support of pro environmental actions means to encourage participation in medical clinical trials and the promotion of world peace The ways that gender interpersonal relationships race and religion might affect decisions to give aid and support to others are also addressed The final chapter offers a unique view of prosocial behavior that encourages researchers and readers to take an even broader consideration of the field to search for a prosocial consilience
