Atrial fibrillation (AF) occurs in between 15% and 45% of patients after pulmonary and esophageal surgery. The occurrence is associated with increased postoperative complications, increased length of stay, and increased mortality [1, 2]. Although treatment of AF has been shown within 48 postoperative hours, specific recommendations for the prophylaxis and treatment of AF appear to be absent from the current literature [3,4]. In fact, even, therefore, the Society of Thoracic Surgeons (STS) Practice on Evidence-Based Surgery formed a committee to derive practice recommendations from the literature.

What follows is an executive summary of the full guideline available at <http://www.sts.org/resources/pulmonaryandcardiothoracic/thoracicsurgery/guidelines>. The full guideline includes the complete introduction and detailed sections that fully supports the recommendations listed here.

Methods

Guideline members reviewed all identifiable published English, related to the prophylaxis and management of AF

The members of the Practice Guideline Writing Committee are required to avoid disclosure of any other financial or personal interests that may be related to the guideline. Guideline members are the STS, Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, Division of Thoracic Surgery, Harvard Medical School, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston, MA; University of Texas MD Anderson Cancer Center, Houston, TX; University of Washington, Seattle, WA; University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI; University of Colorado, Aurora, CO; University of Wisconsin, Madison, WI; and the VA Medical Center, Durham, NC.

after 1990 as well as selected papers related to medical AF and AF after cardiac and general surgical procedures. Publications for review were selected by guideline members based on their review of prophylaxis, (2) treatment, and (3) postoperative. Levels of evidence were assigned to each publication, and recommendations were made regarding each intervention using the American College of Cardiology/American Heart Association guideline methodology. The document was reviewed and approved according to the STS Approval Process for Practice Guidelines.

Guideline-based guidelines must not be viewed as absolute rules. Guidelines are intended to assist health care providers in decision making by providing a range of acceptable approaches for the management of specific conditions. The ultimate judgment regarding care of a particular patient under specific circumstances must be made by the provider. There are certainly circumstances in which management that falls outside of these guidelines will be appropriate.

History and Risk Factors

Risk factors for postoperative AF include male sex, increasing age, magnitude of lung resection, magnitude of esophageal resection, history of preoperative heart failure, comorbid lung disease, preoperative episodes of all degree of preoperative AF, and procedures associated with postoperative inflammation, especially dissection around the aorta [5, 6]. Reproductive, low highest rates of postoperative AF occur after pneumonectomy, esophageal pneumonectomy, and adult lung transplant [7, 8]. After minimally invasive thoracic surgical procedures, the incidence of AF has been as low as 14% [9]. In one study, 4 of 100 minimally invasive thoracic patients (4%) had AF [10]. Most guidelines use AF during postoperatively associated to a wide range of studies
