1. In the Coda to Fahrenheit 451 that was added to the book in 1979, Ray Bradbury rejects the idea that minorities should push for removal of pieces of books or other works to which they object. Read the Coda in its entirety and consider Bradbury's controversial view. Is censorship ever an appropriate tool for minorities who seek to discourage offensive or objectionable material in art? Cite real examples as well as Bradbury to develop your argument.
2. It is a great irony that a book condemning censorship has been, itself, subject to censorship in our society. Censorship can include not only the outright banning of a book but also the deletion of certain portions of a book. Investigate instances of censorship of Fahrenheit 451 and justify and explain whether or not you would defend the use of the book.
3. In the last 5 pages of the book, there is a lot to learn from what Montag and Granger have to say. What is the most important lesson from these pages and how can it apply to life in today's society?
4. Describe how books and learning can change a person. How have you experienced this personally? Explain with evidence.
5. How are the characters in Fahrenheit 451 representative of people in today's world? Explain with evidence.
6. What is the role of technology in this society? How is this similar or different to the role of technology in our current society? What can we learn from this? Explain with evidence.
7. Look up the classical poem "The Tyger" by William Blake. The title of part three of Fahrenheit 451 is taken from this poem. What connections can you between the poem and part three? What statement is each making about society? Explain how they relate.
