

2. Interpersonal – This refers to the type of communication that takes place between and among people and creates a personal relationship between and among them. Normally, it includes two individuals, and it can vary from casual and very personal to formal and impersonal.

Types of Interpersonal Communication

Dyad Communication – communication that happens between two people.

Examples:

- You consoled your brother who was feeling down.
- A conversation between your father and mother about the latest announcement of your Barangay Chairman.

Small Group– This applies to interactions involving at least three but not more than twelve people engaged in face-to-face interactions to achieve the desired goal. In this type of conversation, all participants can freely express their ideas throughout the discussion.

Examples:

- You are having a discussion with your two brothers about the surprise party you are planning for your Mom's birthday.
- Kathlyn who came back from the United States called her three brothers and four sisters and announced that she is getting married.

3. Public– This type refers to a communication that enables you to send or deliver a message before a crowd. The message can be transmitted for informative or persuasive purposes. "In public communication, unlike interpersonal and small groups, the channels are more exaggerated. The voice is louder and the gestures are more expansive because the audience is larger" (Hybels & Weaver, 2012, p 19).

Examples:

- Delivering a graduation speech to your fellow graduates.
- You were elected as the new SSG president of your school and were given a chance to deliver a message of gratitude to your fellow students.

4. Mass Communication – This refers to communication through television, radio, newspapers, magazines, books, billboards, the internet, and other types of media.

Examples:

- You are watching a televised briefing on COVID-19.
- You have recorded a commentary for your school's Online Discussion of the pandemic and uploaded it in your social media account.
