Introduction

The mounting popularity of social networking sites (SNSs) among Internet users across the world certainly demands an introspection of their shorter-term and longer-term effects on individuals as well as societies. Available statistics demonstrate that an estimated 1.5 billion people across the globe have already created their profiles in SNSs, with the majority being on Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, Ning and Tagged (Das et al., 2011).

At the surface, it is believed that SNSs have a great potential to essentially alter the character and scope of our social engagements on all fronts – individual, interpersonal, as well as societal (Ellison et al., 2009).. But while common practice always assumes the shifts to be beneficial, this paper seeks to demonstrate that SNSs have negatively altered the framework for social interactions that bind society together.

Understanding Social Networking Sites

In the literature, SNSs are defined as web-based services that provide people with the capacity to "... (1) construct a public or semi-public profile within a bounded system, (2) articulate a list of other users with whom they share a connection, and (3) view and traverse their list of connections and those made by others within the system" (Tokunaga, 2011, p. 425).

SNSs popularity continue to rise throughout the world, especially among adolescents, not only because of the way they have changed how this group of the population receive information (Neelamalar & Chitra, 2009), but also due to their equalizing effect as users often feel the freedom to express themselves in ways not possible via other offline channels (Cardon et al., 2009).

However, there exist salient issues that need to be illuminated to understand the actual effects that SNSs are having on the social relationships that act to glue the society together.

Essays in Media and Cultural Studies Graeme Turner,2019-12-06 Spanning a decade of key research this collection brings together a selection of essays and chapters from leading media scholar Graeme Turner for the first time The organising theme of transition focuses on both the state of the media as it continues its evolution into the digital era and the fields of media and cultural studies as they grapple with modifying their approaches and assumptions in response to the changing dynamics of the systems they study In their own attempts to understand a range of contemporary moments over the decade these essays also provide a personal history of Graeme Turner's participation in the key debates within media and cultural studies. The essays deal with the shifting states of television with the changing relation between the media and the state, the rise of celebrity and the role of a critical agenda for media and cultural studies in the future. The collection is introduced and concluded by two new essays respectively assessing the recent past and the necessary futures for these fields of study. Providing key insights into a range of topics, this book is ideal for students and scholars looking to deepen their understanding of the transitionary nature of media and cultural studies.

New Media in New Europe-Asia Jeremy Morris, Natalya Rulyova, Vlad Strukov, 2016-04-14. This volume offers an in-depth investigation of the role of new media in the political, social, and cultural life in the region of Europe Asia. By focusing on new media which is understood primarily as internet-enabled networked social practice, the book puts forward a political and cultural redefinition of the region which is determined by the recognition of the diversity of new media uses in the countries included in the study. This book focuses on the period prior to the advent of world internet revolutions and registers the region at its pivotal moment at the time of its entry into the post-broadcast era. Does the Internet aid democratisation or is it conditioned by socio-political norms? Has the Internet changed politics or has it had to fit existing political structures? Has the use of digital technologies revolutionized election campaigns? How is hyperlinked society different from society prior to the advent of the web? How do ordinary people actually use the Internet? These and other pressing questions crucial to understanding the post-socialist world are investigated in the current volume. This book was published as a special issue of Europe Asia Studies.
