

How does water and wind change rocks and soil over time?

Weathering – the breaking down of rocks into smaller pieces.

Erosion – The movement of weathered rock and soil.

FOSSILS – the hardened remains of a plant or an animal that lived long ago. Fossils tell scientists about plants and animals that lived on land and in water long ago. Scientists can learn information about extinct animals by studying fossils.

How are fossils formed?

Some fossils, such as bones and teeth, look like the actual parts of animals. Slowly, minerals replace the bones.

Other fossils, such as dinosaur tracks in mud, are only marks left behind. These marks are called trace fossils. The mud hardened, and in time changed to rock.

A mold is the shape of a once-living thing left in sediment when the rock formed. The living thing that made the mold breaks down, only leaving a cavity shaped like the plant or animal.

A cast forms when mud or minerals later fill a mold. The cast has the actual shape of the living thing. Remember, you made a trace fossil, mold and model fossil in class.

For a fossil to form an animal must die and be buried by mud, sand or clay!

3.8.3. Students will investigate the physical attributes of rocks and soils.

- Explain the difference between a rock and a mineral.
- Recognize the physical attributes of rocks and minerals using observation (shape, color, texture), measurements, and simple tests (hardness).
- Use observation to compare the similarities and differences of texture, ponder how, and color in top soils (such as clay loam or potting soil) and sand.
- Determine how water and wind can change rocks and soil over time using observation and research.

3.8.2. Students will investigate fossils as evidence of organisms that lived long ago.

- Investigate fossils by observing authentic fossils or models of fossils or view information resources about fossils as evidence of organisms that lived long ago.
- Describe how a fossil is formed.
