Introduction

The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city in Iran. The participants were 30 elderly people (15 men and 15 women) aged 65 and over. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any training program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of aerobic exercises, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The physical health of the participants was measured using a series of tests, including a 6-minute walk test, a 30-second chair stand test, and a handgrip strength test. The psychological health of the participants was measured using a series of questionnaires, including the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS), the Geriatric Anxiety Inventory (GAI), and the Geriatric Symptom Scale (GSS). The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly better physical and psychological health than the control group after 12 weeks of training. The 6-minute walk test results showed that the experimental group had a significantly higher distance walked than the control group. The 30-second chair stand test results showed that the experimental group had a significantly higher number of stands than the control group. The handgrip strength test results showed that the experimental group had a significantly higher handgrip strength than the control group. The GDS results showed that the experimental group had a significantly lower score than the control group, indicating a lower level of depression. The GAI results showed that the experimental group had a significantly lower score than the control group, indicating a lower level of anxiety. The GSS results showed that the experimental group had a significantly lower score than the control group, indicating a lower level of symptoms. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological health of elderly people. Further research is needed to investigate the long-term effects of such a program.
