

1.3 V-shaped valley

In the upper course of the river the river valley is described as being v-shaped. The river is small and the land around it is very steep.

Photo 1

Interlocking spurs
Shoulders of dense and resistant rock are hard to erode so the river weaves in between these in a zig-zag pattern. These are called interlocking spurs.

Steep valley sides

River is narrow and winds around interlocking spurs

Loose material
The weathered material rolls down the valley into the river creating a rocky channel. Some smaller material is washed down stream.

Vertical Erosion

Water is pulled down by water, creating erosion on the river bed. This makes the channel cut deeper into the landscape, creating steep sided valleys.

Weathering

Freeze-thaw (water gets into cracks in rocks and freezes at night) and biological (roots get into cracks and expand them) weathering breaks down soil and rocks in the valley sides.

Very narrow valley floor

NOW TRY IT...

Task:

Draw your own sketch of a v-shaped valley and annotate the features. Use photo 1 to help.

Challenge:

Research "formation of v shaped valleys" and create your own set a diagram to explain the formation

Question:

Outline the characteristics of a v-shaped valley [2] (AO1)
