Sapatnekar, 2009-12-02. We live in a time of great change. In the electronics world, the last several decades have seen unprecedented growth and advancement described by Moore's law. This observation stated that transistor density in integrated circuits doubles every 1.5-2 years. This came with the simultaneous improvement of individual device performance as well as the reduction of device power such that the total power of the resulting ICs remained under control. No trend remains constant forever and this is unfortunately the case with Moore's law. The trouble began a number of years ago when

CMOS devices were no longer able to proceed along the classical scaling trends. Key device parameters such as gate oxide thickness were simply no longer able to scale. As a result, device leakage currents began to creep up at an alarming rate. These continuing problems with classical scaling have led to a leveling off of IC clock speeds to the range of several GHz. Of course, chips can be clocked higher, but the thermal issues become unmanageable. This has led to the recent trend toward microprocessors with multiple cores, each running at a few GHz at the most. The goal is to continue improving performance via parallelism by adding more and more cores instead of increasing speed. The challenge here is to ensure that general purpose codes can be efficiently parallelized. There is another potential solution to the problem of how to improve CMOS technology performance: three-dimensional integrated circuits (3D ICs).
