International Review of Research in Mental Retardation, 2007-08-30. Autism Spectrum Disorder is one of the most researched and popular topics in the fields of psychology, psychiatry and special education. In the last 30 years, the amount of new information on assessment and treatment has been astounding. The field has moved from a point where many considered the condition untreatable to the current position that it may be curable in some cases and that all persons with this condition can benefit from treatment. Intervening with school age children continues to be a major focus of assessment or intervention. However, expanding the ages of those receiving more attention from younger children to older adults is becoming more prevalent. The consensus is that intensive treatment at the earliest recognized age is critical and that many adults evince symptoms of the disorder and warrant care. The field is full of many proposed treatments, many of which offer promise but no data. Thus, a book on evidence based assessments and interventions across the life span should be of value in helping to sort out the more credible interventions as defined by the research and what methods have the best support. Given the popularity of the topic and the vast array of potential assessments and treatments available, this volume will be aimed at delineating what the researchers have shown, has the best evidence to support particular methods. International Review of Research in Mental Retardation is now available online at ScienceDirect full text online of volumes 23 onwards. Elsevier book series on ScienceDirect gives multiple users throughout an institution simultaneous online access to an important complement to primary research. Durlauf, 2018-06-26 Most Americans strongly favor equality of opportunity if not outcome but many are weary of poverty's seeming immunity to public policy This helps to explain the recent attention paid to cultural and genetic explanations of persistent poverty including claims that economic inequality is a function of intellectual ability as well as more subtle depictions of the United States as a meritocracy where barriers to achievement are personal either voluntary or inherited rather than systemic This volume of original essays by luminaries in the economic social and biological sciences however confirms mounting evidence that the connection between intelligence and inequality is surprisingly weak and demonstrates that targeted educational and economic reforms can reduce the income gap and improve the country's aggregate productivity and economic well being It also offers a novel agenda of equal access to valuable associations Amartya Sen John Roemer Robert M Hauser Glenn Loury Orley Ashenfelter and others sift and analyze the latest arguments and quantitative findings on equality in order to explain how merit is and should be defined how economic rewards are distributed and how patterns of economic success persist across generations Moving well beyond exploration they draw specific conclusions that are bold yet empirically grounded finding that schooling improves occupational success in ways unrelated to cognitive ability that IQ is not a strong independent predictor of economic success and that people's associations their neighborhoods working groups and other social ties significantly explain many of the poverty traps we observe The optimistic message of this beautifully edited book is that important violations of equality of opportunity do exist but can be attenuated by policies that will serve the general economy Policy makers will read with interest concrete suggestions for crafting economically beneficial anti discrimination measures enhancing educational and associational opportunity and centering economic reforms in community based institutions Here is an example of some of our most brilliant social thinkers using the most advanced techniques that their disciplines have to offer to tackle an issue of great social importance
