Analysis:

Medha Srivastava is the artist of these two artworks and these artworks are from Art station. The main issue that is being highlighted in the first image is repulsion and blame should be cast on spectators who choose to be mute and the second image is the person who always put on smile is prone to depression. The social issue of the first image is imperative because many people assume that bystanders are not criminal because they do nothing wrong and the perpetrator should be held culpable for all the crimes he's committed. This misconception is still lingering around many people's minds. Spectators are truly "indirect criminals" who choose to be silent when they alighted upon the heinous crime. They don't even reach out to the victims and choose to disregard the victims who are mired in an abyss of sexual violence and lawlessness. Furthermore, the social issue in the second image is pivotal because it mostly happens among white-collar workers who have to put on a happy face even though there is something bad still plaguing them. People always regard that a person who always displays pleasant and cheerful appearance is a happy-go-lucky person because to them one's looks are predicated on his or her emotions. Therefore, there are three main points that I am
