

Scoring

- In a projective test such as the CAT, there is no right or wrong answer.
- Thus there is no numerical score or scale for the test.
- The test administrator records the essence of each of the stories told and indicates the presence or absence of certain thematic elements on the form provided.
- As in the TAT, each story is carefully analyzed to uncover the child's underlying needs, conflicts, emotions, attitudes, and response patterns.
- The CAT's creators suggest a series of ten variables to consider when interpreting the results.
- These variables include the story's major theme, the major character's needs, drives, anxieties, conflicts, fears, and the child's conception of the external world.
