

How to Write a Research Paper?

Research paper is a project you will be assigned to complete when studying at higher levels of high school and college. The main aim of a research paper is exploration and identification of a scientific, social, technical, psychological, historical or other issues. Most students say that this task is one of the most daunting, but with good focus, organization, and planning you can make the process simple. In this article, we will discover the best way to write a research paper.

Step #1: Choose a good topic

- Choose a topic of your interest. Your success sometimes depends on the enthusiasm you can apply to the writing process. Of course, it comes from your interest only.
- Narrow the topic down. Do not write about religion in general, but rather about Hinduism, Buddhism, or Christianity.
- Before you start research, ask your teacher for feedback about the chosen topic.
- Select a topic you can cope with. It is great to create yourself a challenge, but let's be honest – it is better to avoid topics that are too specialized or technical. First, it might be hard to find enough materials. Second, you risk getting puzzled and stuck.

Step #2: Get enough materials

For a research paper, reliable and up-to-date sources are really important. Surf the Internet for background information. Start with encyclopedias and almanacs.

When searching source to use for your paper and locate on your bibliography page, pay attention to the websites domains: .edu, .gov, or .org are worth of your attention. More often these website are educational and governmental, so you can use them as sources. Be attentive when choosing from .com websites. Many of them are great, but the information located there might be unverified. Beware of personal home pages, too.

Visit your college library for:

- Catalogs;
- Atlases;
- Encyclopedias and dictionaries;
- Newspapers and magazines.

When looking through the resources, bookmark useful websites and write down important ideas. These notes will save you from looking back again and again and wasting your time.

Step #3: Write your thesis

Look through your notes and pick the most important ideas and combine them into a sentence that expresses your topic. This is a declaration of your core thought. Most of your research paper will consist of evidence to prove your thesis.

Step #4: Write the entire essay

- Introduction. Make a brief explanation of your topic and the ways you are going to approach it. Explain some of your main points to make readers interested in your work and continue reading.
- Body. In your body paragraphs, you will present arguments and support them with quotation from the reliable sources to prove your thesis statement. You have to provide supporting arguments for every point you make.
