Introduction

The Continuous Glucose Monitor System... (Neil, still waiting for mktg literature that talks about the product features) (readings are taken from interstitial fluid, sensor is inserted under the skin and worn for 72 hours,

Would be good to have an illustration (line drawing) showing the relationship between receiver and transmitter while the transmitter is being worn with the sensor.

The Complete System

The Continuous Glucose Monitor System includes:

- a sensor, which is inserted under your skin and takes glucose measurements for up to 3 days (72 hours)
- a wireless transmitter that connects to the sensor and sends glucose results to a receiver
- a wireless receiver that captures and displays the glucose measurements sent by the transmitter

Receiver

The receiver is like a pager. You may wear it on your belt or carry it in your pocket or purse. It receives glucose readings sent from the transmitter. You can see the readings, which are updated about every 3 minutes, on the display screen. The receiver also acts as a FreeStyle blood glucose meter, allowing you to perform regular blood glucose tests using a FreeStyle test strip. Refer to "Testing Your Blood Glucose" on page 10 for information on performing a FreeStyle test with the receiver.

NOTE: To conserve on battery power, the receiver screen goes blank after 10 seconds. To turn on the display, simply press the right selection button.
