

Third European Report on S&T Indicators, 2003

European Commission Ranking

By The European Commission

The European Commission also weighed in on the issue, when it compiled a list of the 22 European universities which have the highest scientific impact (measured in terms of the impact factor of their scientific output). The list is available at: http://ftp.cordis.europa.eu/pub/indicators/docs/2nd_report_snapshots.pdf (see page 2). This ranking was compiled as part of the Third European Report on Science & Technology Indicators, prepared by the Directorate General for Science and Research of the European Commission in 2003 (updated 2004).

the rest of the world are provided in the full report. The report first identifies the top university in each country, in terms of three criteria: number of publications, citations, and impact factor. Second, a ranking is provided of the top 22 European universities in terms of citation impact factor of their scientific publications. UCI is ranked first in terms of the number of publications and number of citations, but only 12th in terms of publication impact. In terms of citation impact (the criterion considered for the pan-European ranking), Cambridge came first and Oxford second, while smaller technical universities, such as TU Eindhoven (Netherlands) and TU Munich (Germany) are ranked third. The report does not provide a direct comparison between European and US/world universities - although it does compute a scientific impact

1. MEMBER STATE PERSPECTIVES: A SNAPSHOT OF RESULTS

Selecting the top national institution at EU Member State level (with the exception of Luxembourg), from the perspective of number of publications, number of citations, and citation impact score, one can discern interesting results. The leading universities of each country are then ranked against each other based on performance in more than 20 disciplines, ranging from clinical medicine to electrical engineering. We can see that University College London comes out on top in both publications (the number of scientific publications produced by the university) and citations (the number of times those scientific publications are cited by other researchers), with Cambridge leading the way in terms of overall university impact scores. This overall university impact score gives an indication of whether a university's scientific publications in leading academic journals are cited more often (or not) than publications in those journals are cited on average.

The top performers by EU Member State
Top performers in terms of publications		Top performers in terms of citations		Top performers in terms of impact
Univ. London	85182	Univ. London	550278	Univ. Cambridge	1.55
