Weathering and Erosion

Erosion

Erosion is the movement of the broken pieces of rock that have been caused by weathering. Wind, water, and gravity transport these pieces of rock away from the site of erosion. Think of a stream when you hear the word "erosion". As erosion erodes away dirt and moves it to a new location, just like erosion happens here.

Once wind and water flow down and can't carry so much sediment, the sediment is deposited, or dropped, in landforms. One way to help prevent erosion is planting plants. A plant's roots grab dirt and hold it in place. You can see an example of plants preventing erosion in the picture below.

Get out there and start planting! Global warming is speeding erosion due to the change in temperatures that are linked to more frequent and more severe storms.

What is one way you can help prevent erosion?
