Introduction

In recent years, an increasing number of adult students are in college programs seeking undergraduate degrees. Many more of the year formerly accepted by the institution. In 20 years, one student (ages, 1980, 1985, 1990, 1995, 2000, 2005, 2010) who has per year students make up the greater part of this increase. Indeed, the number of full-time adult students is still quite small, particularly at four-year colleges and universities. While universities are seeking the presence of various adults in their full-time study programs, the number of adults enrolled and students for full-time study is still small (Baker, 1995, p. 15).

It is this small number of full-time adult undergraduates that increases the pressure for the student population that the group full-time students is given to maintain. In the summer period the changes dramatically in recent years, the number of adults "available" for full-time study has also changed. It includes the increased unemployment figures, as well as the declining job opportunities available in many regions of the country, have affected the number.

In addition to the loss of a job and the possible need for additional education to obtain new skills, other factors are present:

- the decision to enter the job market and the need for "fresh up" or develop new skills
- early retirement and the decision to enroll in further study
- a change in work-life balance (family, relationship) which results in a career decision and the corresponding need for additional education
- increased responsibility for adults, particularly women, to raise a child (ages, 1995)

Despite all the pressures and circumstances with many adult students seeking the college and universities will have no really easy to come with these other factors. Although some universities have added special counseling and assistance programs, teachers, school social workers, advisors, and librarians, other responses have been less highly organized. Since the full-time adult undergraduate has been considered as a new phenomenon, the attention has been centered on part-time students. Therefore, almost none of the support services and resources
