Abstract

The goal is to provide a robust and challenging problem statement for a capstone, advanced systems analysis and design course for CIS/MIS/CS majors. In addition to the problem narrative, a representative solution for much of the business modeling deliverables is presented using the UML paradigm. A structured analysis deliverable will be the topic of a second paper on this subject. The authors teach the systems analysis and design course(s) or the systems development course(s) at their university. The CIS senior capstone course that the primary author teaches requires that the student complete one or more business modeling case studies. The authors have used some cases/problem statements from various systems analysis and design texts; however, the authors wanted a problem statement that would challenge a systems team at the senior undergraduate level to produce a complete static, functional and behavioral business model that could be designed and implemented. The authors believe that the narrative should include enough detail to enable the team to use either Unified Modeling Language (UML) or Structured Analysis.

Keywords: static model, structural model, functional model, behavioral model, project, tasks, teams, and team members.

1. INTRODUCTION

The goal of this paper is to develop a case study (i.e., problem statement) and a Unified Modeling Language (UML) solution for an automated system that will 1) create and track projects, 2) assign teams to projects, 3) assign tasks to teams, 4) assign the most qualified team members to the teams, and 5) address project costing. This business system for Premier Consulting, Inc. will be titled "Automated Project Management and Scheduling." The scenario of this case study begins with the Chief Information Officer (CIO), which might be played by the instructor of the course, who approves and initiates a project and instructs the Project Director to create teams. This new case study is destined to be used in the Advanced Systems Analysis and Development capstone class. Either a multiple team approach or single team approach will be used in developing a solution depending upon the number of student in the class. Different teaming scenarios are presented in the conclusion to this paper.
