

- 6 Many gel ant farms also include a special LED light that makes the gel look very cool and the ants easier to observe. In addition, the light encourages worker ants to dig deeper and more complicated tunnels. One drawback to the gel is that over time it can grow mold. Another snag to gel ant farms is that they can take several hours to set up. It is extremely important that the farm has the right kind of air holes because too little air can kill the ants. Holes that are too large can allow ants to accidentally escape.

- 7 The least expensive ant farms can cost between nine and twelve dollars. A supply of ants usually costs an additional nine dollars. More expensive ant farms that are designed to be displayed in a classroom can reach a cost of three hundred dollars or more.

- 8 It can be difficult to know exactly how long ants in an ant farm will live. The average estimate is six months, but some colonies may live for a year or longer.

- 9 An ant farm is extremely safe if you take care of it properly. Be careful not to knock over your ant farm or try to take the ants out for a closer look. This can result in your house being infested by ants. For this reason, very young children should not be left alone with ant farms. Even if there are no young children in your home, you should be ready for the rare possibility that your ants could escape and cause an infestation. If this happens, be sure to get help from a trusted pest control company.

- 10 In conclusion, ant farms are not very expensive and do not take up much space in your room. If you are comfortable with the possibility that your small pets could cause problems if they escape and you want to watch live insects dig tunnels and interact with one another, you may want to talk to your family about investing in an ant farm.
