Giving Us a Better World

People start businesses to make money. Making a profit is important, but it doesn't have to be the only objective. Some business people also use their money to help their communities. Others use it to solve problems in the world. Here are three examples of business generosity.

The Hershey Company

Milton Hershey was born in 1857 in rural Pennsylvania. As a young man, Hershey worked for a candy maker who taught him many things. In 1893, Hershey was able to start his own business, but Hershey

Essential Questions

How do successful people give back?

A Life Lived in Thirds

Doris Dakin spent many years building a successful career in finance. Then she heard about the idea of living life in thirds. The idea is that each third of life has a different goal: to learn, to earn, and to return. In other words, the first third of life is devoted to school and training. The second third is devoted to running a living. And the final third is devoted to returning, or giving back to help others.

Sharing for the benefit of all.
A Life Lived in Thirds.
