Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, predoctoral internship on the self-reported confidence of occupational therapy students in their ability to perform the tasks of an entry-level occupational therapist. The study was a pretest-posttest design. The pretest was conducted at the beginning of the internship and the posttest was conducted at the end of the internship. The study was conducted with 100 occupational therapy students who were enrolled in a 2-year occupational therapy program. The results of the study indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform the tasks of an entry-level occupational therapist increased significantly after the internship. The results of the study also indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform the tasks of an entry-level occupational therapist was significantly higher than the confidence of the students who did not complete the internship. The results of the study suggest that a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, predoctoral internship is an effective way to increase the self-reported confidence of occupational therapy students in their ability to perform the tasks of an entry-level occupational therapist.

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be addressed. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

2. Next, it is important to gather relevant information and data. This can be done through research, consultation with experts, or by analyzing existing data sets.

3. Once the information is gathered, the next step is to develop a plan or strategy to address the problem. This plan should outline the steps to be taken and the resources needed.

4. The fourth step is to implement the plan. This involves carrying out the tasks outlined in the plan and monitoring progress as it goes.

5. Finally, it is important to evaluate the results of the implementation. This involves comparing the actual outcomes with the expected outcomes and identifying any areas for improvement.
