

Fact and Opinion

- The sky is blue.
- The sun is yellow.
- Summer is the best time of the year.

- The snow is white.
- The temperature is 25°F.
- Winter is the best time of the year.

Can summer and winter be the best time of the year? Many people like summer the best, others may like winter. There may be people who like spring or fall, too. When people pick favorite things, it is called their opinion.

An opinion is a statement that cannot be proven. Just like the different seasons, no one can prove the best season. Everyone might have a different opinion. On the other hand, a fact can be proven. For example, you can prove the sky is blue, the sun is yellow, the snow is white, and it is 25°F. Sometimes facts can be false too. It is a fact to say you are six feet tall, but it would be a false fact. The true fact would be your actual height.

Here are some examples of facts and opinions:

There are 25 students in the classroom. The children are very well-behaved. Mrs. Jones is a nice teacher. She is married to a fireman. They have three children. We had a party for Mrs. Jones last year. Everyone had fun at the party. There were 37 people who came to the party. School is the best.

You can prove 25 students are in the classroom, Mrs. Jones is married to a fireman, and they have three children. All of the facts can be proven.

On the other hand, some people can disagree about the children being well-behaved, Mrs. Jones being a nice teacher, or that school is the best. None of the opinions can be proven. They can be argued. Opinions, though, can be supported with facts, as in the following example:

The children are very well-behaved because they do not cause problems.
