

NOTE

- The unicellular organisms like Paramecium, Leishmania, bacteria, etc., reproduce by binary fission.
- Leishmania causes the disease known as kala-azar (or black fever). Kala-azar is also known as leishmaniasis.

B) Multiple fission:

In multiple fission, the parent organism splits (or divides) to form many new organisms at the same time. For example- Plasmodium reproduce by this method.

During unfavourable conditions a cyst or protective wall is formed around the cell of a Plasmodium. Inside the cyst, the nucleus of cell splits (or divides) several times to form many smaller nuclei called daughter nuclei. Little bits of cytoplasm collect around each daughter nuclei and thin membranes are formed around them. In this way, many new daughter cells are formed from a single parent cell within the cyst. When the favourable conditions arrive, the cyst breaks open and the many daughter cells present in it are released, each forming a new organism.

NOTE

- Plasmodium vivax is the malarial parasite which produces malaria disease in human beings.
- Malarial parasite Plasmodium is carried by female Anopheles mosquitoes from one person to another thereby spreading the malaria disease.

2. BUDDING:

In budding, a small part of the body of the parent organism grows out as a 'bud' which then detaches and becomes a new organism. For example - Hydra and yeast reproduce by budding method.
