For parameter lengths, researchers should always report both the number of parameters in the model (the number of weights, and, for neural networks with hidden layers, also the total number of connections) and the number of parameters that are estimated from the data (the number of parameters that are not fixed). For example, in a neural network with 1000 input nodes, 100 hidden nodes, and 10 output nodes, there are 100,000 connections in total, but only 1000 + 100 + 10 = 1110 parameters are estimated from the data. The number of parameters that are estimated from the data is the number of free parameters, or the number of degrees of freedom. The number of parameters that are fixed is the number of constraints. The total number of parameters is the sum of the number of free parameters and the number of constraints. The number of parameters that are estimated from the data is the number of degrees of freedom. The number of parameters that are fixed is the number of constraints. The total number of parameters is the sum of the number of free parameters and the number of constraints.
