Inspection Strategy under Indeterminacy Based on Neutrosophic Coefficient of Variation Muhammad Aslam,Mansour Sattam Aldosari, The existing sampling plans which use the coefficient of variation CV are designed under classical statistics These available sampling plans cannot be used for sentencing if the sample or the population has indeterminate imprecise unknown incomplete or uncertain data In this paper we introduce the neutrosophic coefficient of variation NCV first We design a sampling plan based on the NCV The neutrosophic operating characteristic NOC function is then given and used to determine the neutrosophic plan parameters under some constraints The neutrosophic plan parameters such as neutrosophic sample size and neutrosophic acceptance number are determined through the neutrosophic optimization solution We compare the efficiency of the proposed plan under the neutrosophic statistical interval method with the sampling plan under classical statistics A real example which has indeterminate data is given to illustrate the proposed plan Comfort ,1898 Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London ,1982
