EXTRACT FROM AN EXAMINERS REPORT
PAPER 2: WRITERS' VIEWPOINTS AND PERSPECTIVE

Revision: Use this Examiners Report to identify what is being looked for and what specific failings in the use of language will cause you to lose marks.

This question presented students with a controversial statement covering a number of aspects on the topic of sport, a theme which was loosely connected to the reading sources. Students were asked to respond to the statement by writing an article for a newspaper on the same topic. There were a number of different strands within the statement which were deliberately chosen to broaden the appeal of the task to as many students as possible, providing students with the opportunity to write about sport from a wide range of perspectives, not just as spectators or participants.

Some students chose to write about fun and fairness in relation to PE lessons at school and their experience of primary school sports days, whereas others took a more political approach and addressed issues of accessibility within sport for the disabled and women. Other common perspectives inevitably involved football, and issues around the injustice of players' wages, the corrosive influence of betting, as well as the furore and 'stench of corruption' surrounding FIFA. Many students wrote about the concept of 'winning at any cost', and the best responses were able to contextualise the idea and frame it within a conceptual understanding of economics, politics or morality. Some of the responses produced under exam conditions, as essentially first drafts, were incredibly impressive and a clear reminder to all of the very high level of skill amongst our students.

Those working at the upper end of the ability range were often able to project an individual voice, sometimes adopting an alternative point of view, such as those students who voiced their perspective that corruption was rife in every area of life so why object to it in sport. These students typically offered a conscious crafting of language, characterised by a subtle moulding of features to suit the context; extending metaphor and other imagery, incorporating puns, and deploying rhetorical devices to devastating effect. The sequencing of their ideas was also exceptional, with a sense of momentum building in their response as the reader was drawn inexorably into a series of increasingly convincing and then compelling points, leading to a carefully structured conclusion. It was particularly pleasing to identify the improvement in these skill strands (use of linguistic devices and sequencing of ideas).

In Levels 2 and 3 examiners also saw an improvement in the sequencing of ideas, supported by the addition this series of a prompt in the answer booklet to remind students to plan their response. There was significant evidence of more planning taking place and this led to a stronger and more coherent sense of a whole argument, which is likely to encourage students towards the clarity necessary to be awarded a mark in Level 3 or above. It is the overall quality of the communication which determines the level, not the quality of the individual skills, and therefore students and centres should focus their efforts on ensuring a clearly identifiable point of view is a priority. Students occasionally fell into some of the familiar traps that have been identified in previous series: over-use of linguistic devices; imprecise use of more sophisticated vocabulary; a failure to signpost the direction of the response; and an inability to sustain an appropriate tone or style for 8 of 9 the given audience, tending towards the colloquial or over-familiar. Some students attempted to address every aspect of the question and were then mined in an array of separate ideas which were difficult to amalgamate into one coherent whole. It is worth stating here that students are not required to comment on every aspect of the statement provided, and those who were more selective in which aspect they addressed tended to produce clearer points of view in their responses.
