

Two Places at Once

- 1 Kendra rushed through the kitchen, grabbing an apple from the fruit bowl before school. She noticed the calendar hanging on the wall. Saturday was circled in red. Kendra opened her eyes wide in horror. She had totally forgotten that Saturday afternoon was Grandma's surprise birthday party!
- 2 Mom had been planning a huge backyard celebration for months. Kendra had listened as Mom talked about the recipes she had found, the beautiful invitations she had sent, and the flowers she had ordered—which Kendra had promised to help arrange. And that reminded Kendra, too, of the folding tables that she was supposed to be picking up from their neighbors and the vases she was borrowing from her cousin on her way home from school. Grandma was usually the one who welcomed everyone to her place. She was a phenomenal host, and Kendra wanted to show Grandma her gratitude.
- 3 Unfortunately, Kendra had another commitment on Saturday afternoon. She had just joined the school's marching band and promised that she would attend a special practice session on Saturday. The band had a strict rule about attendance: Anyone who didn't give a week's notice before missing a special practice would be dropped from the band.
- 4 Kendra considered the consequences. She was new to the band, and she wrestled with the idea of making an excuse that she didn't know the rules. But she had signed Mr. Riley's commitment form on the very first day she held her drumsticks in her hand and managed to make a rat-a-tat-tat sound that was pure magic. She considered quitting the band. That would be a hard decision though. While she'd just begun, she was thrilled to be in the band because she had never created anything before. This beat was all hers. Being in the marching band was one thing she had all for herself, not something she had to share with her little brothers and sister.
- 5 Later that day, a group of band members joined Kendra on the way to class. John, one of the drummers, asked Kendra why she looked so miserable. Swallowing hard, Kendra explained to him and another drummer, Gaby, that Grandma's surprise birthday party was on the same Saturday afternoon as band practice. How could she be in two places at once?
