

Bullying in Schools: The Real-Life Effects and Strategies for Prevention

I'm sure we have all known a bully. Maybe you have even been bullied yourself or have witnessed someone else getting bullied. Today, it may seem so common to hear of kids teasing or making fun of each other that it may not always be taken as seriously as it should be. Let's take a look at the real-life effects Bullying has on its victims. Addressing the Scope of the Issue Extensive research shows that Bullying at school is increasing. Since Bullying has negative consequences for the general school climate and for the rights of students to learn in a safe environment without fear, and since Bullying can have lifelong negative effects, schools need to understand the wide scope of the problem, and they need to figure out how to discourage Bullying and to encourage positive behavior. "Various reports and studies have established that approximately 15 percent of students are either bullied regularly or initiators of bullying behavior," says author Ron Banks in the article Bullying in Schools. This statistic helps us to understand how often Bullying truly occurs in schools today. We see more statistics in the article Bully-Proof, Your School by Colleen Newquist. Newquist states, "As many as 7 percent of eighth-grade students in the United States stay home at least once a month because of bullies." Not only are these poor students being bullied, but they also resort to skipping school and missing out on their education just to avoid conflict. Victims of Bullying may also develop "stress-related illnesses" such as chronic fear, stomachaches, and headaches, as well as depression and low self-esteem. Lifelong Consequences These problems can have severe effects on someone's life and may follow them into adulthood. Michael Lemonick, in "The Bully Blight," reports that Bullying has negative consequences for bullies. He says, "Bullies are four times as likely as the average child to have engaged in criminal behavior by age 24." They also grow up lacking social, coping, and negotiating skills and are more likely to engage in substance abuse. Lemonick also develops the dangers of Bullying with his story about LaShanda Timble. "LaShanda Timble is what society considers a goth. She wears black lipstick and listens to rock bands rather than rap music like other kids her age. Kids at her school tease her by claiming she will cast a spell on them and calling her ugly and crazy," says Lemonick as he tells her story. In this situation, LaShanda is being teased for being herself and looking the way she wants to look. There's nothing wrong with being different. Deconstructing the Bully A definition of a bully has several parts. One part of the definition of Bullying is to describe the behavior of the bullies. They typically seem to get some sort of satisfaction from inflicting harm on others, have little empathy, are generally defiant or argumentative towards adults, have little anxiety, tend to break the rules, and maybe antisocial. Bullies tend to display certain traits or behavior; this may help you identify a bully. A second part of the definition of Bullying is a description of the victims of bullies. Victims are usually anxious, insecure, cautious, and suffer from low self-esteem, rarely defending themselves against Bullying. They may lack social skills and friends, meaning they are often alone. This makes them easy targets for bullies. They also tend to be physically weaker than their peers. These are traits a bully victim typically
