DEFICIT FORECAST FOR 2019/20 RISES TO 4.2 MLN T

Raw sugar futures in New York suffered significant losses in the run-up to the expiry of the July contract, which was characterized by plentiful supplies and sluggish demand. The front-month July contract touched a three-week low of 11.95¢/lb on June 26 amid ideas that supplies remain ample despite a poorer production outlook for India and Brazil. Similarly, white sugar futures in London fell to USD318.90 a tonne the same day, also a multi-week low.

The details published by the exchange on the expiry of the July raw sugar contract showed that 41,488 lots (2,107,677 tonnes) of sugar will be delivered against the expired contract, the largest ever. As expected, Brazil was the main origin, with 28,463 lots (1,445,980 tonnes), followed by Thailand with 11,811 lots (600,013 tonnes) and Guatemala with 1,214 lots (61,674 tonnes). Alveas, ED&F Man, Sucden and Louis Dreyfus purchased the raw sugar delivered against the July contract, according to traders.

Wissar and COFCO International were said to be the deliverers of the sugar. The tendering of Thai raw sugar added to concerns that physical demand may be weak in Asia as Thais usually trade at a significant premium to the futures market and therefore seldom find their way into #11 deliveries.

Last but not least, India had its driest June in five years because monsoon rains were delayed, the state-run weather department said. Overall, the monsoon rains were a third lower than average, though in some states including the sugarcane growing northern state of Uttar Pradesh, they were as much as 61% lower. If the rains do not improve over the next two to three weeks, India could be facing a crisis that hampers harvests and rural demand.

India needs a good monsoon this year as in 2018 a drought ravaged crops, killed livestock, emptied reservoirs and drained water supplies to city dwellers and some industries. Hardest hit were the western states of Maharashtra and Gujarat, along with Tamil Nadu, Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh and Telangana in the south, and Madhya Pradesh in central India. The IMD has forecast average rainfall in 2019, while the country's only private forecaster, Skymet, has predicted below-normal rainfall.

Monsoon rains are crucial for the country's farm output and economic growth. About 55% of India's arable land is rain-fed, and agriculture makes up about 15% of a USD2.5 trillion economy that is Asia's third-biggest. And India's economy, which grew at its slowest in more than four years over the January-March quarter, is not in any condition to take a light from a poor monsoon.

It is against this background that we present our quarterly update of the full-fledged world sugar balance 2019/20 (Oct/Sept). While it is evident that this still comes with a rather high degree of uncertainty for most countries, some developments seem to become clearer.

First, the latest Unica crushing updates for Brazil's Centre/South show that the allocation of cane for sugar production was even slightly lower than last year in the season so far,
