Good Public Policy or a False Sense of Security? The Romanow Report: Sustainability and the Trade-offs - Janice MacKinnon

Mackinnon believes that the report did not handle the issue of sustainability especially in the context of trade offs between government funding and where health care fits into that. - 613
Com Romanow effectively conveyed Canadians commitment to the goal of a publicly funded and administered health care system. - 613

The report supports important recommendations of Senator Michael Kirby's 'The Health of Canadians - The Federal Role' such as the need for gov to pay for home care and drug costs for a period of time after patients are released from the hospital to remove any incentive to prolong patients' stays in expensive hospital facilities. - 613

The report also supports recommendations of provincial reports by Ken Fyke (saks) and Don Mazankowski (alberta) such as the need to move quickly to implement primary health care reform and to develop better mechanisms to monitor health care spending and outcomes. - 613.

However the report departs from most other recent government commissioned reports on health care as Romanow believes that the current health care system is not only sustainable but can be expanded without raising taxes or finding other funding to pay for health care - 614

This is due to the fact that costs relative to the Gross Domestic Product (GDP) have remained pretty constant over the last decade - 614 (Romanow Report note 1 at c.1)
However MacKinnon does not think this is the most accurate way to measure sustainability - 614

It does not consider critical costs of the current health care system such as the significant deficits accumulated by hospitals and health boards. It also ignores the hidden costs of outdated equipment as governments are focusing resources to funding existing services not upgrading. Ontario estimates that it would take $10 billion over the next 5 years to upgrade its facilities and equipment. - 614

Furthermore costs relative to GDP do not indicate the affordability of services. - 614

Moreover, the funding which has gone to health care has left other areas neglected such as education, spending has fallen from 7.9% to 6.9% - 615

And so the first issue with the Romanow Report is the problematic basis of its assessment of sustainability. - 615

Reports completed by Mazankowski and Kirby highlight that the current system is not sustainable due to the growing costs not matching the government revenue. - 615

Kirby and Mazankowski also consider the trade offs in their report and how this will affect the other areas which are becoming under funded. - 616

The Romanow Report does not consider the trade offs and so misses the implications of them such as the connection between good health and alleviating poverty, enhancing education, providing clean water, affordable housing and clean air. The ever increasing
