Innovation, Universities, Science and Skills Committee, 2009 In its report examining the impact of Lord Leitch's 2006 review of skills Prosperity for all in the global economy world class skills 2006 ISBN 9780118404860 the Innovation Universities Science and Skills Committee says the Government must place re skilling at the heart of its skills policy in order to meet the challenges of recession and redundancies Re skilling rather than up skilling should be the priority as redundancies force people to move to other sectors Government focus should be on tackling skills shortages and approaching skills as part of wider national economic development planning The Committee recommends that more flexibility is built into training support to ensure skills development meets current and future demand The abolition of the Learning and Skills Council and the creation of a new Skills Funding Agency for post 19 training could add to existing confusion about training and skills provision The system must be simplified and the Government should quickly provide clarity on the roles of the different organisations and ensure the system can be understood by its users It is essential that the Government's Train to Gain programme is made flexible enough to deal with rapid adjustments for unemployed people who need quick re training Aspects of Train to Gain are currently failing to satisfy different demands and unless the programme is radically re focused one of Leitch's central reform planks will be lost The sustainability of co funded higher education courses is a concern and the Committee warns that the current economic downturn may affect the willingness of employers to meet the required level of investment

Evaluation in Planning Nathaniel Lichfield, Angela Barbanente, Dino Borri, Abdul Khakee, Anna Prat, 2013-03-09 This book is the result of a three day workshop on Evaluation in theory and practice in spatial planning held in Ramsey Hall University College London in September 1996 Some 30 people from 8 different countries attended and 20 papers were presented The majority of them now form the basis for this book This occasion was the third on the topic the two preceding having taken place in Umea in June 1992 and in Bari in 1994 Following these three meetings we can now say that this small industrious international family really enjoy meeting up from time to time at each others places in the presence of older members and new children each one presenting his her own recent experiences It particularly enjoys exchanging views and arguing about the current state and the future of evaluation in spatial planning all families have their vices It is also pleasing to see these experiences and discussions resulting in a book for those who could not attend and for the broader clan in the field Not long time ago but ages in the accelerated academic time scale evaluation in planning established its own role and distinct features as an instrument for helping the decision making process Now this role and these features are exposed to major challenges First the evolution of planning theory has led to the conception of new planning paradigms based on theories of complexity and communicative rationality

Institutional Barriers to Sustainable Transport Carey Curtis, Nicholas Low, 2016-06-03 In a world seeking to tackle global environmental problems such as climate change the importance of local and national institutional change to deal most effectively with these issues is critical This book presents an investigation of the institutional barriers preventing the development of a new vision for urban transport compatible with these realities and in those terms sustainable Through an examination of transport planning in Australia the book challenges conventional wisdom by showing through original research how car dependence is as much an institutional as a technical phenomenon The authors case studies in three metropolitan cities show how transport policy has become institutionally fixated on a path dominated by private road based transport and how policy systems become encrusted around investment to accommodate private cars erecting an impenetrable barrier against more sustainable mobility and accessibility solutions Representing a new approach to understanding transport policy this book brings sophisticated political institutional analysis to what has traditionally been the domain of engineering and technology The authors connect the empirical content to this theory and the issue of sustainability making the findings applicable to most cities of the developed world and to fields beyond transport planning A strategy and program of action is outlined to take advantage of changing public perceptions and aimed at creating a new vision for urban transport
