

Roman Life

Rome was famous for its amphitheaters, coliseums, and other places where gladiator fights, chariot races, performances, plays, athletic contests, and other events were held. Rome was also well-known for its art, architecture, and other areas of society. In today's world, New York City may be considered a "modern Rome." Life in ancient Rome was different compared to society today, but many things remain the same.

Roman Jobs	Farmers lived in the countryside growing the most common crop, wheat, which was used for making bread. Becoming a soldier in the Roman Army was the way for the poor class of people to earn a regular wage. Merchants and craftsmen made, bought, and sold items from all over the Empire, with craftsmen making dishes, pots, jewelry, weapons, and more. There were also entertainers including musicians, dancers, actors, chariot racers, and gladiators. Finally, besides the life-time government jobs, educated Romans became lawyers, teachers, and engineers.
Family	Family life was important to the Romans, and the head of the family, the father, was called the paterfamilias. He had all the power in the family, but the wife did have some say and handled the finances and managed the household. Boys went to school and most girls stayed home with the mother.
Food	A light breakfast began each day, but then very little food until the major event each day, dinner, which started at about 3:00 in the afternoon. It was a social event lasting longer than meals today and consisted of mostly non-meat items such as bread, beans, fish, vegetables, cheese, and dried fruit. As they would lie on their sides on a couch, the Romans were served their meals by servants.
