RESEARCH Researchers estimate that increased intracranial pressure resulted in 10 deaths and 100 injuries, with another 100 people hospitalized. Single intracranial hemorrhages were seen in 70 and multiple intracranial hemorrhages in 100 of 1700 people who survived the bombing. In 1976, researchers found that increased intracranial pressure was caused by increased cerebral blood flow. They noted that survivors sustained good eye perfusion and that some victims died rapidly from increased intracranial pressure.
