

Personal Model of Leadership

Introduction

For growth and development in any field, and especially a field involving working with different sets of people, personal values and leadership qualities play a vital role to ensure the achievement of the set objectives. The values and beliefs of the leader in any organizational set up will eventually influence the organization and the surrounding community in the end, through its operations in the locality. In such a case, a leader has to uphold and inculcate the desired basic values and qualities to his/her members, and at the same time exploring various leadership styles and settling on what works best for the organization.

Values That Will Provide Foundation For My Model

At an individual level, I will show my effectiveness by acquiring the competency standards necessary for the organization. As a competent member, I will explicit the required knowledge, skills, and attributes for the tasks at hand, and provide excellent output according to the set standard. I will also be responsible and make myself reliable at all times, by filling in any gaps that may come up in the process of duty, apart from being available at all time. I will take proper care of my physical and mental health by regular checkups so that I am in the best state while undertaking my duties and boost my reliability. I will also practice self-control, so that I do not overreact in cases of disappointments by members or when am not able to meet the set goals. Through self-control, I will make sober decisions that can turn negative situations into opportunities beneficial to me others, with no future regrets about my actions.

Interpersonal relationships require great tolerance since the members come from different backgrounds, and they have different personalities, which a leader must fuse in order to achieve set objectives. I will be tolerant and encourage members to be forgiving towards each other and learn to embrace their strengths rather than focus on each other's shortcomings. I will embrace and encourage loyalty among members, so that we are committed to the course through being consistent with providing excellent services. Loyalty to the organization will encourage us to sacrifice in order to meet the set goals, and be faithful to each other so that we eliminate any threat to achieving our goals. At organizational level, I will be imaginative, create more sophisticated working conditions and equipment in line with the current t
