

1896- Philippine Revolution

One of the most significant events in Philippine history is the 1896 Philippine Revolution, inspiring generations of Filipinos to embrace a proud sense of nationalism. During a time of great hardship and war, Filipinos from all walks of life came together for a common cause. Colonialism should be resisted.

From the beginning of our history, Filipinos have wanted to oppose colonization. To be able to stand on our own territory, to fight for our identity and independence to the point that even our ancestors would devote their young life for it. As Filipinos, we are naturally secretive, to the point that the anti-colonial secret organization known as Katipunan was created to oppose Spanish domination in our country. Katipunan was founded by Andres Bonifacio, a liberationist who leads an open de facto government that is built around laws and elected leadership with the purpose of achieving independence. Is it also normal that today's teens covertly arrange their outdoor parties to enjoy their young life while their parents are the ones who always dictate what they should do? If I were them, I would likewise want the ability to make my own decisions. Because this is my body, I shall manage myself in accordance with my desires. When one person has too much influence over another, the self might turn rebellious. No one wants to be enslaved by foreigners, just as no one wants to be enslaved by foreigners in the Philippines. This is our territory. This should be in our hands, not in the hands of others. We are supposed to be able to stand and live without being dominated by foreigners. As one could assume, they revolted and covertly formed the Katipunan in order to gain independence. Despite the negative effects of colonialism on our past, the cultures we got as a result of colonization have had a significant impact on our culture today, and how we develop ourselves has been influenced by this in some way. He couldn't be self-sufficient from the beginning of his life because he was still a child. For better or worse, he still need guidance. I've discovered that one of the Katipunan's main goals is the political secession of the Philippines from Spain, which I believe is still vital. 333 years was more than enough time for us to gain control of our own country. We couldn't possibly exist in a state of misery, exploitation, servitude, and suffering much longer. What would we be like now if our heroes hadn't gotten desperate to free themselves from the oppressive Spanish colonial system? Since we have been woken, ruined and enjoying our independence, it has become a timeless endeavor for me. Many things remind me of the Katipunan, who, despite immense difficulties, came together for the welfare of our country. And it is still them who inspire future generations to continue and potentially complete what they started: the creation of a nation in which every Filipino is really free.

If I were asked if I am for reform or revolution is necessary when especially the people of the country are suffering from slavery and laborers are paid with a small amount of salary by the other people, I would say yes because revolution has impacted a good result until now, which awakens the people of their sense of nationalism. If I were asked if I am for reform or revolution is necessary when especially the people of the country are suffering from slavery and laborers are being paid with a small amount of salary by the other people. Every individual has the right to be regarded as a human being and to file a complaint if they are being abused. And discussing the Philippine revolution is crucial because we were duped and our own land was almost taken away from us by foreigners.
