Sociology 2

Families and households

This Answers document provides suggestions for some of the possible answers that might be given for the questions asked in the workbook. They are not exhaustive and other answers may be acceptable, but they are intended as a guide to give teachers and students feedback.

Section 1 Functionalist and New Right views of the family

- 1 The term 'organic analogy' refers to the extended comparison made by functionalists between the human or other living body and society, with the organs of the body equivalent to institutions and structures in society.
- 2 The term 'function' is used by some sociologists for the role or purpose that a social institution has which contributes to the success or survival of the society as a whole.
- 3 Nuclear families fulfil the function of ensuring boys and girls understand the expected correct behaviour for their sex; they do this, for example, by the adults (parents) acting as role models.
- 4 One change that New Right thinkers would see as undermining the traditional nuclear family is the growth of cohabitation (living with a partner outside marriage) because the bond between the two adults is not as strong as it would be if they were married. A second change is the growth of lone parent families; they are seen by the New Right as less effective than the nuclear family in socialising children because the lone parent has to try to carry out both the instrumental and expressive roles. Finally, the New Right would see the increase in the number of mothers of young children in full-time work as threatening the nuclear family because they would doubt that these mothers could fulfil the expressive role well enough for the wellbeing of the children.

Note: there are many possible answers, including:

- higher divorce and separation rates
- increasing number of births outside marriage
- number of children not being raised by their biological parents
- same-sex couples raising children

It is not necessary to explain your answers (because the question doesn't tell you to do this) but to do so can help you to be sure that your answer is right and may convince an examiner that your arguments are tenable. Be careful though not to write too much — you have other questions to answer.

- 5 Functionalists argue that the nuclear family 'fits' modern industrial societies in ways that other types of family do not.
