Learning Objectives

- LO1 Explain the difference between phylogenetic classification and taxonomic classification.
- LO2 Explain the modern evolutionary classification.
- LO3 Explain the key defining properties of monophyly.

Learning Objectives

Phylogenetic Classification The study of evolutionary relationships among organisms (called phylogeny). Phylogenetic classification classifies organisms in a strict phylogenetic relationship (evolutionary relationship).

- LO1 In taxonomy, monophyletic groups organisms that belong to one common ancestor and their shared attributes and qualities that they are considered as one group. The larger the group, the further back the common ancestor (evolutionary descent) is considered.
- LO2 In this sense, monophyletic/phylogenetic groups is characterized as a whole as a group of species that occupies a single common ancestor and all phylogenetic without parent or offspring but is strongly split group. For example, birds group that includes all species that are descended from a common ancestor, and a group includes only species that belong to a single lineage (evolutionary descent).

Phylogenetic Classification is a system that groups organisms according to their evolutionary relationships. A phylogenetic tree is considered a basis in biological classification with three elements as follows:

- LO1 In phylogenetic tree, root refers the ancestral lineage of a species as a root and species. Modern systematics group species into taxons that reflect a phylogenetic relationship.
- LO2 The basis of the diagram is the root represents the common ancestor that is the root of the organism (also called root).
- LO3 Clade is a group of species, monophyletic is derived as a clade/monophyletic is that they share the same common ancestor and particular characteristics in evolution (also called monophyletic).

LO3 In Phylogenetic Classification and systematics that branch that is considered a group of species as a taxon that represents a group of organisms that share a common ancestor. The taxon (the evolutionary group) characterizes the species that, that group (including the species that is considered a monophyletic) and the group is strongly related to the taxon.

Evolutionary Classification

- LO1 How did Modern theory of evolution change the way biologists thought about a taxon? as a group?

Phylogenetic groups organisms in a strict evolutionary relationship. Taxonomic groups organisms in a loose evolutionary relationship.
