Step-By-Step Guide

The image shows a student's hand using a yellow highlighter to underline text in a reading passage. The passage is about primates and includes several paragraphs. The student has highlighted the following text:

1. Read the text.
2. Use the color markers shown to underline answers in the reading.
3. Write your answer on the line.

Primates are a special type of mammal that includes monkeys, apes, and humans. There are nearly 200 different species of primates. All primates are alike in many ways. Primates have very good eyesight, and they can see in color. Primate types can also be very different. Some primates weigh less than one pound, while others can weigh up to 450 pounds. The feet of primates are also very different. Some primates can not grasp with their feet, but some primates can. Some primates, including humans, have fingernails, while others have claws. Primates usually have only one baby at a time, although sometimes twins are born. Baby primates need their mothers for several years until they can care for themselves. Humans, gorillas, and apes are among the smartest animals on Earth and they are all primates. Primates are very special mammals.
