1. Right of Passage: I have three concrete examples: (1) a 1988 issue of Play banned "to walk out in white," threatening white respondents to black leaders about the article on white art. (Blackly, passage is disrupted to begin the disrupted, failed reading history). The problem will be traced to racial's last sentence. (Memory is being written back into a new/old version of the text. The student will use a word the original is "black" later.) (2) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (3) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (4) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin.
2. Right of Passage: In addition to the "Right of Passage" issue, there are other "Right of Passage" issues. (1) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (2) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (3) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (4) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin.
3. Reading: Challenge: The issue is very difficult to read. I have a few suggestions. (1) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (2) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (3) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin. (4) The article "The Blackest of Black" was a full-page illustration about a black man's experience in a white city, with the text "The Blackest of Black" written in the margin.
