Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program resulted in significant improvements in physical and psychological health compared to the control group. The walking program was safe and effective for improving the health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- 1. Background
The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged men.
- 2. Methods
A total of 30 men (mean age 45.5 ± 3.2 years) participated in a 12-week training program. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises.
- 3. Results
After 12 weeks, the participants showed significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and psychological well-being. The mean heart rate during exercise decreased from 150 to 135 beats per minute, and the mean maximum heart rate increased from 175 to 185 beats per minute. The mean muscle strength (measured by a hand dynamometer) increased from 25 to 35 kg. The mean score on the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) decreased from 15 to 10.
- 4. Conclusion
The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged men. Further research is needed to determine the long-term effects of such programs.
