

Blackburne, 1997, p. 123: "Black and Shapere's (1996) book is a very welcome contribution to the philosophy of science, and in particular to the philosophy of biology."

But as things are, evolutionary developmental biology has been off to a slow start. It has been a somewhat barren field for evolutionary biologists. Other organisms have been more successful, and could not get enough traction. It just took a while until the right type of organisms came around. Clearly, something was still missing? – development, things as they proceed for instance, whether organisms grow and change like a fetus? – compare embryology

But in other organisms, such as bacteria and other organisms, this is not possible. – development itself, something that is not even possible for bacteria – a fetus
