

Gravimetric Analysis of Chloride: Lab 4

Lab Partner: Trinity Campagna

Jessica Goigon

Section: 2A38

Introduction:

Gravimetric analysis is a technique designed to isolate and determine the measurement of mass of the ion. By separating and determining that mass of the ion in the solution we can determine the molar mass and the other molecule used in the compound (M_xCl_y). Through gravimetric analysis the values of M , x , and y can be determined. Typical gravimetric analysis has chemists weight the sample of the unknown substance, dissolve the sample in a solvent, add a reagent to form a precipitate, filter and dry the precipitate and calculate the percent of substance from the weight of the precipitate and the sample. For example, in this experiment the unknown compound of Cl is added to water, to ionize. Then mixed with both HNO_3 and $AgNO_3$, which forms a precipitate through the reaction in Figure 1.A. After the precipitate is formed it is filtered and dried in a drying oven, after the final mass of $AgCl$ is determined and used in the calculations to determine the mass of the compound M .
