Upper and Lower Respiratory System Structures

1. The respiratory system is divided into the upper and lower respiratory systems.

2. The respiratory system is divided into the upper and lower respiratory systems. The upper respiratory system includes the nasal cavity, oral cavity, and pharynx. The lower respiratory system includes the larynx, trachea, bronchi, and lungs. The diaphragm is a muscular partition that separates the thoracic cavity from the abdominal cavity. The pleural cavity is the space between the two layers of the pleura. The pleural cavity contains a small amount of fluid called pleural fluid. The pleural fluid reduces friction between the two layers of the pleura. The pleural fluid also helps to maintain the negative pressure in the pleural cavity. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is what keeps the lungs inflated. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to expand and contract. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to fill with air. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to empty of air. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to stay in place. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to move. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to breathe. The negative pressure in the pleural cavity is also what allows the lungs to live.
