5 pages | 1017 words

The role of medicine is comparable to other occupations that could be considered "the supporters" of the community. Nurse practitioners work with many other people including their patients, paramedics, surgeons, and etcetera. In order to become a nurse practitioner, it takes a lot of hard work and dedication. This particular career choice could be more than enough to support one's everyday life. There are many contributions healthcare has towards different communities. In the field of medicine, there is a large amount of schooling that is necessary. First of all, you will need to acquire a high school diploma. According to Madera Unified School District, one is required to complete 120 credits in order to graduate. Also, one must maintain a 2.6 GPA throughout four years of high school. During senior year, the pre-employment skills must be passed by completing a Portfolio and Mock Interview with a score of 4 or higher. The next step would be to complete an application to attend the University of San Diego. In order to be accepted into the University of San Diego, it is a requirement to have a minimum of a 3.0 GPA during high school. For the SAT they focus on the highest score of 1240 from a single test date (UCSD). Each UC campus is able to offer admission to a few students who might not be able to meet all of these requirements. According to admissions officials at the University of San Diego, the process includes the need to obtain an applicant's secondary school record, application essay, standardized test scores, demonstrated talents, and GPA are the most significant factors in the admissions process. Admissions officials may also consider a student's character and whether the applicant is a first-generation college student. The admissions office will then reach out to you if you are chosen to be admitted and there you will need to take four years of prerequisites. After those four years, you will need to apply to a medical school for another four years. All of these steps taken prepare you for a future in becoming a nurse practitioner. The basic description of being a nurse practitioner is diagnosing and treating acute, episodic, or chronic illnesses, independently or as part of a healthcare team. A nurse practitioner needs to be able to provide patients with information needed to advocate health, reduce risk factors, and/or prevent disease or disability. They need to know when and how to perform routine or annual physical examinations. Also, a really good quality that people in the healthcare field should have is how to speak to others clearly and effectively to be able to convey information. They need to be able to actively look for ways to always help people. Becoming a nurse practitioner has many advantages to your desired lifestyle. A nurse, on average, makes about $126,770 per year in the state of California (California Career Zone). One day I would eventually like to settle down and start my own independent life. One of my main goals is to be able to buy my own house in San Diego, California and spend my free time...
